the most recent school shooting Friday in Santa Fe, Texas, where 10 people were killed and a 7-year-old student was arrested.

The Parkland shooting has caused student walkouts, demonstrations in Washington, D.C., and aigger reaction from teachers who should be armed. Educators in West Virginia, Kentucky, Oklahoma, Arizona and Colorado have gotten into putting teacher pay in the national spotlight.

Low salaries have long been an issue in education, deterring some from becoming teachers and causing others to leave the profession.

The Lee County school district has about 5,000 teachers. The district has hired about 350 teachers for the 2018-19 school year. The starting salary for its teachers is $40,000.

In Collin the public school district has about 3,000 teachers. It has hired 49 teachers for the upcoming year. Starting pay for new teachers there is $41,250.

A teacher strike is over in Florida is unlikely, said Mark Castellano, president of the Teachers Association of Lee County. He said it's illegal for teachers to strike in Florida, and if they do, there are consequences, including being fired.

Quinn said she has dreamed of being a teacher since childhood, and that all the talk about strikes and showdowns isn't souring her on becoming a teacher. She said the time she spent at Barron Collier confirmed for her that she chose the right career path.

"I mean there are definitely days where I would come home...a lot of times I had some classes where the students were really engaged, and they were really enjoying what we were doing in class," she said.

The name is true for FWS senior Stephanie Lijigegeen. The 26-year-old mother of two said the shooting in Parkland changed her to second-guess her career choice either.

"For my entire life for every bad thing that happens, how successful are you going to be?" asked Lijigeen. "I'll be a fourth-grade teacher and attend school at James Stephens International in Fort Myers, starting in August.

Lijigeen said she has known since the third grade that she wanted the job. But when she entered college in Tennessee, she pursued a hospitality management degree because her parents told her that was "not the way to go" and "you are not going to get paid."

She said she was told when her degree only led to her being a manager at a convenience store, she decided to pursue her dream of being a teacher.

"I wanted to make my dreams come true because I was missing a part of myself," said Lijigeen. who is getting a degree in elementary education from FSW.

"Don't ask us to take lives"

FGCU senior Elodie Lillefors is all passionate about education as she is about it in her officer.

No, teachers shouldn't be armed, and yes, they should be paid more, Lillefors believes.

"I think what's going on with the gun debate is that a large part of this country believes that this is a problem which is being fought by people who are trying to avert violence in schools," she said.

"You have to know that the other people in your school are going to do their job because you open that door and you pretend that you can be putting every single child in your classroom at risk."

Lillefors, who spent 23 years as a schoolteacher in Virginia, said the craft class also deals with the emotional impact that coming out safety protocols can have on teachers.

"Many people, as you know, who go into elementary education, they have huge hearts, so it's very difficult for them to even think about these matters," she added.

Senior education majors at FGCU have to write summaries of the safety protocols at the schools they are assigned to during both levels of the student-teaching program. The students also go through orientation sessions that include discussions about safety.

Jackie Greene, the coordinator of the level two for GFU, said she doesn't think students realize how important a role they play in school safety until they go through the orientation sessions.

"It often becomes very quiet in the room when we are having these discussions," she said. "People are...realizing the importance that now they are the ones"
